

"I think they'll lose the lawsuit," he said. "So they better get ready to figure out how they're going to accept him."

me: "A (brat) child telling on someone and getting their way, acting cocky."

For his part, the 13-year-old prospective student told ABC News: "As far as me still wanting to go to Milton Hershey I still do but I am now afraid to. I want them to apologize to me for making like I'm going to be a reckless teenager and put someone else in jeopardy. They should give me more credit than that."

being to get his way "feeling violated"

How was the HIV transmitted?

"I don't feel like me anymore and there is no outcome for that," he added. "But if it will help others like me to NOT be discriminated against, I guess I could try to get over it one day. I don't know when, but one day I'm 13 right now and still got a whole lot of life to live."

not a common story not necessarily considering his condition

I wonder if his lawyers messed up - They should be coaching him on what to say and how to say it.

Who is paying this lawyer?

Who contacted the media

Why -

Obviously, as a society, we cannot ostracize every HIV pos. person - For the greater good we have to do something for them... but is it the school's (a private school's) job to take on this burden / responsibility

- Other cases like this?

- Rights infringements
- A side person in a theater or restaurant?
